The roadway from the entrance will branch to right and left across the north end of the drill field, and from this four driveways will branch off to the south, two of which will run the entire length of the reservation within a few feet of the east and west boundaries. The other two pass on either side of the north drill field inside the lines of quarters and strike the bisecting road at the middle of the reservation.

The war college will be about 300x100 feet, with a bay window on the south side thirty-seven feet in diameter. It will be two stories high above a basement. In front will be a terrace of limestone, with graceful baiustrade about 500 feet long, from which steps extending its entire length will lead down to the lawn, stretching away in a broad field bordered with shade trees.

The scheme now being followed out is largely that tentatively arranged by a board of officers appointed by Secretary Root in 1901 to formulate plans for the establishment of the war college and engineer school. It provides for the harmonious arrangement of the many buildings around an extensive quadrangle drill ground.

The park will be crossed by a driveway running east and west. On either side of the reservation near the boundary this road will lead into two roadways running north and south the entire length of the reservation. The war college—the most pretentious of the buildings—will be located at the southern end of the drill ground. South of this there will be assmall park, with numerous walks and flower beds.

At either end of the war college the quarters for the administrative officers of the institution will be located, there being four buildings in each group. It is proposed to furnish the students at the war college commutation of quarters and allow them to obtain lodgings outside the reservation, so that no buildings as yet have been provided for their accommodation.

The northern portion of the drill ground will be heardered as the drill ground.

The northern portion of the drill ground will be bordered on three sides by the numerous buildings connected with the engineer school of application and for the accommodation of the troops stationed at them.

On the west side on a line and facing east are the quarters for commissioned officers and their mess hall, a group of sixteen buildings, now almost completed. On the east side, facing west, will be a line of pleasing quarters for noncommissioned officers, a total of ten buildings, in the center of which will be the engineer school building Across the north end of the field stretch two immense barracks, Once of these is now ready to be roofed. Between these buildings there is a roadway leading direct from the entrance to the reservation, which has been moved about forty feet to the east of the old gates no as to be in the exact center of the north boundary.

of the street that one heard the expression generally that the campaign would sion generally that the campaign would be a question of candidates, not of prin-ciples.

When conditions and sentiments such as these prevail and are gladly accepted, it can be taken for granted that, in Wall street at least, there has been a material change in speculative sentiment and that traders at least are willing to buy stock for an advance.

traders at least are willing to buy stock for an advance. In actual business which provides the basis for a sustained improvement there has been no change. As was indicated in these columns last week, the sentiment on the outlook is more helpful, but sentiment has not yet brought any new orders. Like the conservative element in the stock market, business men are waiting for the turn when there will be reason and basis enough for purchasee of commodities.

Collins and Miss Purcell coarded at the same house. When the young man was taken suddenly ill several weeks ago Miss Purcell undertook the task of nursing him solely for charity's sake. She remained faithful until death came.

Often during his delirium Collins spoke of a young lady at his old home, and during his rational hours begged his nurse that, in case he should die, she would take his body back to his old home. Miss Purcell gave him her promise, and it was to keep that piedge that she started on her long journey to-day.

VENTILATION EXPERIMENTS WATCHED WITH INTEREST.

Railroad Officials, as Well as Boards of Health, Depend Much on the Result of Tests. The Republic Bureau.

14th St. and Pennsylvania Ave.

Washington, July 17.—Reports received here on the investigations into the subject of ventilation and its relation to the public health now in progress under the auspices of the Boards of Health of various cities are to the effect that the Boards of Health are following the same lines pursued in In that general movement expectorating sanitation.

In that general movement expectorating in the street cars and all public conveyances was first attacked and now attention is directed to the ventilation of these public utilities and for precisely similar reasons: "That in no other public place of such limited dimensions are so many people so often and so long confined and nowhere else is the danger of contagion to the multitude so pronounced."

To what extent contagions diseases can be communicated by the inhalation of the respirations of affected persons has never been satisfactorily determined, some authorities contending that certain diseases, notably consumption and other throat and pulmonary troubles, can be contracted in this manner, while others, equally learned, maintain there is absolutely no danger of infection from this source.

Railroad officials are watching the experiments with great interest, as to quote Doctor C. B. Dudley, the chemist of the Pennsylvania system: "It seems not improbable that if a vote of the traveling public were taken as to improvement in passenger cars a large majority would favor ventilation, and it is fair, in justice to railroad officers, to say that this is not ignored by them."
